

Elections

It was a busy year for elections. In March, Mr Donald Tsang was re-elected as Chief Executive. November saw the District Council Election take place, with 405 elected positions at stake in Hong Kong's 18 District Councils. Finally, in December, a hotly contested by-election for Hong Kong Island's vacant seat in the Legislative Council brought an end to an exciting year.

行政區 2007 年 行政長官 選舉
Executive Election of Region of the People's Republic

Above: A young citizen pins up a message on a 'wish-making board' set up by a shopping mall in Kwun Tong for people to express their hopes to candidates in the Chief Executive election.

Top: Bystanders watch as Chief Executive election rivals Donald Tsang and Alan Leong shake hands after the announcement of the election result.

Right: Mrs Anson Chan (second from left) was elected to the Legislative Council in a December by-election on Hong Kong Island. She joins other candidates on the podium for the announcement of the result.

Above: Members of the public learn more about Hong Kong's electoral systems at the Electoral Information Centre set up by the Registration and Electorate Office.

Left: The Secretary for Constitutional and Mainland Affairs, Mr Stephen Lam, visits a polling station in Kowloon Tong during the District Council Election.

Above: Ballot staff count votes at the 2007 District Council Election.

Right: Mr Justice Pang Kin-kee, Chairman of the Electoral Affairs Commission, shows the proper way of casting a vote at a mock polling station.

